Letter to the Editor Richard R. Slomon

Dear Horsey,

The Experimental College, unlike most welfare state boondoggles, appears to be experiencing a modicum of success which can only result from individual initiative. Contrary to your altruist logic (?), institutions cannot exist or be effective without individual initiative. In turn, rational individual initiative cannot be sustained other than by rational self-interest. This requires self-valuation, i.e. the egoism that you so despise.

It appears that somehow, in spite of all pervasive morass of Christian altruist and socialist-facist collectivist attitudes on this campus, Messrs. Schiffman, Le Pere and Douville have had the unspeakable temerity to demand a fair wage ($740?) for their work. Personally, I would advise them to establish their own institution for profit and leave the incompetent junior bureaucrats to stew in their own statist juices.*

I know that the idea of an individual acting purely in his or her own self interest i.e. non-sacrificially, is wholly alien to you. It is also evident that the right of the individual to explicitly demand fair payment for his or her goods and services offered for trade, is also repugnant to you.

Horsey, you represent well the snivling contempt held by altruist-collectivist society for the right of the individual to live his or her own life and to own property.

* I have since found out that government regulations are so complex and restrictive that it is next to impossible to establish a school which can compete with the "free" state schools.
